This officer was in charge of one of the forward companies, and, although his position was being continuously attacked by the enemy, he set a fine example to all by his coolness and energy. He also kept battalion headquarters well informed of the situation, and sent in excellent reports. He organised several small counter-attacks, and ejected the enemy from small portions of his position. He greatly helped the company on his right by directing the fire of a heavy trench mortar onto a quarry, into which the enemy had penetrated. He held onto his position until late in the afternoon of the 22nd, and only withdrew when he was practically surrounded by large numbers of the enemy, and he had lost nearly all of his men."
