"For a conspicuous act of gallantry in the field. The telephone communication between one battery and another close to the front line trenches had been cut by enemy shell fire, and it was absolutely essential that communication should at once be re-established to ensure the success of the attack. A volunteer was called for to undertake the repair work, and Corporal Torrance stepped forward. The wire ran through a valley which was continuously being shelled by the Germans, and in which they had laid a very effective gas barrage. Donning his gas mask and other accoutrements, Corporal Torrance set out on his perilous journey, and within an hour was successful in re-establishing communication."
